It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

PREFACE.

§ 1. ADAM DE MURIMUTH, the author of the following Chronicle 'of his own days,' which embraces a period of forty years, was born in the reign of Edward I., and flourished in those of his successors, Edward II. and Edward III. The erroneous dates which have been assigned by some to the period in which he lived, as well as to that of the duration of his Chronicle, have occasioned some obscurity ; so that, as we adopt one or other of his biographers' chronology, his annals are deprived of ten years' contemporary authority, or they are exaggerated to a period of upwards of thirty beyond their actual conclusion.

This error is mainly attributable to an oversight on the part of Leland, who, in his notice of Adam of Murimuth, asserts that his Chronicle embraces a period of sixty years, namely, from 1320 to 1380, and that its author lived in the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II.; an unfortunate oversight, as this statement has been adopted without examination by Bale, and is repeated by Pitseus and some other subsequent biographers.¹ But what in Leland,

The erroneous period assigned to Adam of Murimuth's Chronicles.

¹ Leland says he wrote from A. D. 1320 to 1380. Bale divides this into two distinct works, both of which he attributes to Adam of Murimuth, viz. the first from 1302 to 1343, and the second from 1320 to 1380. Pitseus also asserts that he wrote two works, the first embracing forty-one years, from 1302 to 1343; the second, thirty-seven years, from 1343 to 1380; while Wharton, with greater correct-whose diligence, general accuracy, and minute research are no less uncommon than universally acknowledged, is only a venial oversight, becomes a culpable offence in his copyists, who ought at least to have read the annals which they profess to give an account of. Nor is it less excusable when we find the author, in his preface, giving such distinct particulars of his work, that we are able to determine with certainty the exact year wherein his own narrative commences.

The period
when his
begin.

In the preface¹ to the following work, the annalist informs us that he was induced to write a Chronicle, from the circumstance of his having experienced the want of such a work ; no author at that time having written annals which came down to a later period than the year 1305 : and that accordingly he had collected materials, and written down in a succinct manner such subsequent events ‘out of the book of his own days,’ as he quaintly expresses it, from the period he was capable of duly weighing the several facts which came under his notice. He then concludes by assuring us that, with the exception of the first three years of his annals, 1303—1306, (which he borrowed from an anonymous Chronicle he found at Westminster,) his narrative was composed of facts which he had either heard from credible authority, or had himself been personally a witness to.

The learned Bishop Tanner is an honourable exception to the followers of Leland ; and to his minute research is due the credit of bringing to ness restricts his work to one, from 1307 to 1343. Hall's ed. Oxon. 1722, (taken chiefly from a MS. in Queen's College, Oxon.) embraces a period of only twenty-nine years, namely, from 1307 to 1336.

light the chief facts connected with the life of our author, exclusive of what he incidentally relates of his own employments in the preface and body of his work. Thus, on the authority of the Digby Rolls, Tanner informs that Adam was proctor for the University of Oxford in a cause which that body had against the Dominicans; and further, that, in consequence of his faithful counsel and service, a yearly pension of sixty shillings was granted to him in the year 1311.¹ From this circumstance, coupled with what he says of himself in his preface, we are warranted, without exceeding the bounds of reasonable inference, in supposing that he was born about the year 1286.

birth.

His preferments in the Church were both numerous and varied; in so much that we may safely conclude that his legal talents, whether civil or canonical, obtained for him a wide and perhaps justly acquired reputation. In 1317² he acted as proctor for the church of Canterbury at the Roman court, then held at Lyons, for the purpose of obtaining the Pope's consent to grant a subsidy to Edward II. for prosecuting the war in Scotland; but which, under the pretext of requiring the papal licence, the English prelates had hitherto delayed granting. This embassy, according to our author's express words, was undertaken at the King's expense, and was successful; Pope John XXII. giving permission to grant to the King a tenth for one year for the required purpose.

thor's mode of computation, viz. from the feast of St. Michael, this mission occurred in the subsequent year; infra, p. 30.

² Ibid. According to our au-

His mission to the Roman court.

As a proof that his conduct in this negotiation was acceptable to his sovereign, we find him again entrusted with an important embassy to the Roman court, in the year 1323;¹ and the eulogium expressed by Edward II., in his letter to the Pope,² shows that his prudence and abilities had been duly appreciated. This instrument informs us that Master Adam de Muri-muth, Doctor of Civil Law, and Canon of Hereford, was entrusted with the whole mind of his royal master, and endowed with plenary authority to make such arrangements as he might judge most fit for the honour and advantage of his sovereign. This mission, as we gather from Rymer, was of a twofold nature, though our author only gives the details of the second point: the first respected Edward's complaint against Stratford Bishop of Winchester;³ and the other, and most prominent, was to oppose the suit of the Scottish King Robert the Bruce, who had sent his brother, Alexander Bishop of Glasgow, and the Earl of Moray, to obtain a remission of the excommunication and interdict which had been imposed on himself and his kingdom, Adam zealously performed the service enjoined him; and, arrange matters as he shall judge most fit. See also a second and similar letter of the same date, addressed severally to twenty-seven of the cardinals; to the Pope's brother, 'domino P. laying before the Pope such arguments to prove the manifest and notorious offence the Scots had been guilty of, not only against the King and kingdom of England, but also against the Apostolic See, he succeeded in throwing such obstacles in the way of the removal of the interdict, that the Scottish legates returned in the following year without having obtained the object of their mission.

It has been already noticed that Adam's promotion to Church preferment was rapid and various. Edward's letter to Pope John XXII. in 1323 informs us that at that time he was a Canon of Hereford. In 1325, according to a MS. quoted by Tanner, he was Vicar-General to John Archbishop of Canterbury; and on the 16th of June of the same year he was appointed to the canonry of Ealdestreet, or Old Street, in the church of St. Paul's, London.¹ According to the same authority, on February 3rd, 1327, he was collated to the prebendal stall of Nesdon in Wiltshire; but according to the laborious Newcourt, in his History of the Diocese of London,² to that of Harleston, or Earlston, in Lincoln: which however may have been a subsequent promotion, as it was certainly a more lucrative stall than the other.³ According to Le Neve, he was Precentor of Exeter in 1328, which office he commuted for the prebend of Wyads-

³ This promotion must have occurred, if at all, ten years subsequently, in 1336, as up to that period the Earlston prebend was in possession of another. The Old Street prebend was the eight-bury, in the church of Lincoln, in 1337. Though unable to verify this latter fact, the former part is confirmed by his name occurring in Baldock's Register, quoted by Tanner, as Commissary of the Bishop of London, as well as Cantor and Precentor of Exeter in 1335. It is more probable, however, that he retained this latter preferment till his death; for Newcourt informs us,¹ on the authority of the Patent Rolls, that one Thomas de Swabey was appointed to a stall in Exeter cathedral, May 2nd, 44 Edw. III. vacant by the death of Adam de Murimuth.

His death.

Judging then from this circumstance, our author must have died perhaps not long previous to the 2nd of May 1370; and allowing him to have been twenty years of age when he began his annals in 1307, 'quo ex anno ego tantæ ætatis eram, quod facta præcipua ponderavi,'² it may not unwarrantably be conjectured that he was born about the year 1287, and that consequently he had exceeded by a few years his eightieth year at his death, a short time previous to the above date in 1370.

The period
determined.

§ 2. From these data we are able to determine that Adam of Murimuth was not the author of all that has been attributed to him by Leland and his copyists. It has already been shown that he has himself expressly fixed the period of the commencement of his annals to the year 1306 (i. e. 1307), according to the arbitrary computation of beginning the year with the feast of St. Michael, which he has adopted throughout his work.³ We are also able to show that Hall's tion, if our Adam de Murimuth died not till 1380, as Pitts says above, i. 153, note o.'

³ Hall, on the authority of the Cardigan MS., adopts 1307 for edition having been taken from incomplete copies, has deprived him of ten years of annals which are due to him alone; for the best MSS. continue the narrative till after the battle of Cressy in 1346. All of these MSS. are holograph, and three at least are evidently of the fourteenth century. It is true that a portion of this additional matter, from the year 1337, has been published by Hearne¹ under the title of an Anonymous Continuator of Hemingford; yet, as this fragment abruptly terminates in the year 1339, we think there is better reason, from the internal evidence of the above MSS., for ascribing the whole to Adam of Murimuth, viz. from the 35th Edward I. to the 20th Edward III.

§ 3. If Leland has been instrumental in propagating a mistake respecting the duration of our author's annals, and of the reigns in which he flourished, he has judged correctly of his value as an historian, when he says that his fidelity to truth is more to be commended than the elegance of his diction.² This estimate is unquestionably correct; but, to the student of history, a strict adherence to facts speaks more for the credit of the annalist, and is perhaps more to the actual commencement of our author's annals. It certainly seems more likely that an author would have begun with a new reign; but his own words expressly restrict it to the last year of Edward I. (Pref. pp. 2, 3.)

¹ See infra, p. 81, note¹. Hearne supposes the author to be an anonymous monk of Westminster, and appends the fragment to his excellent edition of Hemingford, p. 387. It agrees with Murimuth from the words 'Item dos assignata,' infra, p. 53, though with occasional variations, till the words 'ubi duas naves statim postea combusserunt.' Hearne's Hem. p. 421, and infra, p. 90, note¹.

² 'Sed, ut ingenue fateor, munus suum multo majori fide quam elegantia ornavit: quanquam illud fuit plane vitium temporis rectius quam hominis.' Leland, de Script. Brit. 385. From this sentiment we beg to dissent. Several of the contemporary annalists, or those shortly after succeeding them, are sufficiently elegant; and an age which produced such native writers as Adam the Carthusian of London, Richard Hampol, and Robert Holkot, ought not to be so lightly despised.

the satisfaction of the reader, than if he had coloured a less scrupulous narrative with the flowers of rhetoric. If the style of our author never rises, it is at least steady, and possesses the natural charm of honesty of purpose, without a shadow of pretension. His mind seems to have been one accustomed to dry facts, and perhaps he was a better lawyer than a divine. It would be unfair, however, to come to this conclusion, because in the course of his annals he indulges in an occasional sarcasm against the Papal court. The abuse of conferring livings in England on foreigners who were either ignorant of the English tongue, or who, drawing the revenues, were non-resident, had in the fifteenth century much increased, and was a subject of frequent remonstrance both on the part of the sovereign and on that of the clergy. Although this abuse in government had not yet reached that unsurpassed climax which occurred in the great schism at the close of the century (1378—1417), it is plain that our author judged correctly of an abuse of discipline then becoming apparent; and that, so far from regarding this as a sign of lukewarmness, or of unsound theology, his repudiation of such policy may rather be interpreted as a proof of his attachment to the Church.

The additional matter in this edition.

§ 4. It has already been noticed that Hall's edition of Murimuth, whom he considers as the Continuator of Nicholas Trivet, terminates in the middle of the tenth year of Edward III.¹ The narrative which follows this, to the close of the year 1346,² is continued from the MSS. hereafter enumerated, and embraces a period of ten years. Although this conclusion of Adam of Murimuth's work is now for the first time published, it is but just to mention that a large proportion of this matter consists of documents and letters, some of which have already been published in Rymer's collections, and some few are to be found in Hearne's edition of Robert of Avesbury. Hearne has also, as has been noticed, given us the first three years (1337—9) of this additional matter, as a Continuation of Hemingford by an anonymous monk of Westminster; the remainder is from the various MSS. cited. The whole ten years, however, we consider to be unquestionably the work of our author. It is true that few of the facts or details are new; yet it is of some importance to determine ten years of our history to be the work of a contemporary, which has hitherto been, to say the least, equivocal: nor is the consequence less, that the authorship has been traced to one whose matured judgment and truthful character is entitled to greater authenticity, and more confident reliance.

§ 5. The principal MSS. which have been collated for this edition are the following:

taken.

1. Cott. Nero, D. x., a MS. on vellum, falsely entitled 'Cronica Nicholai Trevit, ordinis Prædicatorum, ab anno CHRISTI MCCLXXVII. ad annum MCCCXXIII. et Continuatio per Adamum de Merimouth ad annum MCCCXLVII.' This MS. is holograph: but certainly the first portion, ascribed to Trivet, was not written by him, whose genuine annals end with the reign of Edward I.; nor has it any resemblance to that work.¹ At the point where the compiler (for this is evidently the work of a transcriber) takes up the Chronicle of Murimuth, he says, 'Tractatus Adæ de Merymouth. Memorandum quod ab hoc loco assumitur transcriptum de tractatu Magistri Adæ de Merymouth, quem dominus ipse composuit de Gestis Anglorum, et aliis commentis, post cessionem fratris Nicholai de Trevet, Theologi de ordine Prædicatorum, et præcedentis tractatus auctoris; sed notandum quod ipse Magister Adam non observat datam Nativitatis DOMINI, aut Coronationis Regis temporibus usitatis: ad festum sancti Michaelis incipit, et terminat, datam anni auctor prædictus.' After which follows the text of Murimuth, beginning at the year 1322¹ with the words 'Eodem anno, in mense Junii, inita fuit treuga cum Scotis, per annos XIII. duratura,' &c. This MS. continues to the year 1346, and closes with the words 'non obstante liberum exitum planasque vias relinquentes obsessis;' which is followed by an obscure list of names, referred to infra, p. 170, note.²

2. Harl. 3836, 4to, vellum, sæc. XIV. is a very valuable MS., and generally the best readings occur in it. Unfortunately, in some places it is somewhat worn, the ink has sadly faded, and a few passages are quite illegible. It commences with Murimuth's preface, 'Quoniam dicitur ab antiquis,' &c., and terminates with the year 1346. This is also a holograph MS., and continues (at folio 17) the narrative without a break in the year 1336, as we have given it in the text, infra p. 82, at the words, 'Quorum statutorum,' &c., following in immediate succession from the point where Hall's edition leaves off.

² At p. 152, note ², a doubt is expressed whether what there follows is the work of Murimuth. It should be noted, however, that Harl. 3836, the best authority, continues the narrative without remark, and hence the balance is confirmed in favour of its being the genuine composition of our author.

3. Cod. Reg. 13·A. xviii. 4, is very valuable, ^{The MSS. used.} and evidently a MS. of the fourteenth century. It will be perceived that we have made much use of this MS. as the foundation of the additional matter ascribed to our author. It unfortunately terminates with a transcript of the letter of the English Parliament to Pope Clement VI. against foreigners holding benefices in England, and dated 1343.¹ It is written in a small cramped hand, and is in some passages, from erasure and other causes, occasionally hard to decipher.²

4. Cott. Claud. E. viii. is posterior to the three foregoing MSS.; but it is a work of much greater care, and more beautifully transcribed. It is written in a large fair hand, in double columns, large folio, (containing 267 leaves,) and is illuminated. It consists of a series of histories, commencing with that of Matthew of Westminster. Murimuth's Chronicle commences at fol. 237, with his preface 'Quoniam ab antiquis,' &c.; but unfortunately the narrative terminates with the year 1341. The contents of this MS. conclude with a collection of miscellaneous documents, some of which, as they occur in the body of the other MSS., are inserted in our text, after being collated with the versions found in this one. It is in general very correct, except in its version of French instruments; though instances of occasional carelessness on the part of the transcriber occur, but seldom of any great moment.³

¹ Infra, p. 152. It is probably this MS. which Wharton had seen when he restricted the conclusion of Murimuth's Chronicle to the year 1343.

² Much facility and advantage have been derived by the editor from a transcript of this MS. in the Lansdown Collection, 791, written in a clear hand by Richard Widmore. He can testify that this has been done with equally great care and accuracy.

³ In this MS. in the portion which contains our author's Chronicle, though comprised in sixteen folios only, there are forty-three initial letters A, all of the same form and character, richly

the Text.

§ 6. Considerable pains have been taken to render the text of the additional matter as correct as possible; nevertheless, several faulty passages occur in the MSS., especially towards the conclusion, occasioned in some measure by the state of the several MSS., which, besides being minutely written, are occasionally injured or the ink has faded. Nevertheless, several faulty passages may have been overlooked in the text; two of which, noticed since passing through the press, are noted below.¹ In like manner, the text of the French instruments is very faulty, and sometimes obscure, but more especially in those which occur only in the MS. Cott. Cl. E. Though care has been taken to make these instruments clear, yet it must be acknowledged that an occasional passage occurs, which is comparatively obscure, but which could not well be corrected without violating the integrity of the original MSS.²

A spurious Chronicle attributed to Adam of Murimuth.

§ 7. In the Cottonian collection there is a MS. (Cleop. A. xvi.) which purports to be the Chronicle of our author. This MS. (of which there is coloured and illuminated, but in minute detail and colour all different. In the whole MS., which extends to two hundred and sixty-seven folios, there are eight hundred and twelve initial letters A, in like manner all similar, yet no two are precisely alike, although the only colours used are azure, lake, flake-white, and gold.

¹ Thus at p. 160 a very corrupt passage has passed without note or comment. Under the paragraph, 'The pope creates a new prince,' it is said, 'quarum seu ad quem effectus hujus fit creationis;' the sense seems to require 'quare, seu ad quem effectum, hujusmodi fit creatio.' Another equivocal passage occurs at the commencement of the year 1346, p. 163.

² These instruments have been given as correct as possible; nevertheless, as many faults and minor errors may have been overlooked, it may be becoming to adopt the words of Hearne, when making a similar apology for oversights on the same subject: 'Nequaquam igitur miraberis, si n pro u, m pro ni, et alia id genus sis reperturus, quum ejusmodi quoque sphalmata in codicibus Latinis inveniantur. Verum hæc eruditus relinquo, in quorum sane numero me neutiquam esse censendum lubens agnosco, ne me pudet fateri nescire quod nesciam.' (Hearne's Pref. Rob. de Avesbury, p. 17.)

a fair transcript in the Lansdown collection, 791) professes to give a continuous Chronicle from 1299 to 1367, and to contain those—

Adami Murimuth 1326—1345.

Johannis de R— 1346—1367.

At fol. 152 b, (fol. 76 a, of the transcript,) the compiler says, ‘Ab anno igitur Gratiae millesimo trecentesimo vicesimo quinto, hucusque (i. e. the end of 1345) Magister Adamus Murimouth, quondam legis peritus ac ecclesiae sancti Pauli canonicus, præmissa chronicavit. Sequentia vero futuris noscere ac memorari quidam frater Johannes de R. monachus Westmonasterii,’ &c. But what is here attributed to Murimuth is certainly not his composition. It seems, however, to be an abridgement, or rather a compilation from his Chronicle, in which many of the minor facts are omitted, and the others enlarged, so as to make the whole a more continuous narrative, in which the original has been merely used as a foundation. Some minor particulars, not given by Murimuth, are occasionally supplied; but the Chronicle seems not to be by a contemporary, and therefore to be received with caution.

§ 8. The Chronicle which is appended to that of Adam de Murimuth is taken from the edition of Hall, who has entitled it a Continuation of Adam of Murimuth. The text, he informs us, is taken from a very beautiful holograph MS. in Queen’s College, Oxon., which, in succession, gives the Annals of Nicholas Trivet,¹ Adam of Murimuth, and this, his anonymous Continuator. Hall hints that this work may have been a subsequent work by the latter author; but as that editor was not aware that Murimuth's genuine narrative proceeds ten years beyond the point where his MS. concludes, nor that the period of Adam's death is approximately known, this supposition cannot be received. Hall's caution in qualifying this conjecture as dubious adds much to his deserved reputation; and this the more so, as the narrative of this Continuator proceeds consecutively with the year after that of the undoubted work of Murimuth.¹

§ 9. The anonymous author of this Continuation commences, as we have mentioned, with the year next following that on which Hall's MS. of Murimuth terminates, viz. in 1337; and thence continues consecutively till the year 1380. It will be observed that the early years of this Chronicle, more especially the first ten years (which are treated at large in the additional matter of the present edition of Murimuth), are passed over with great brevity; nor is this brevity much enlarged till about the year 1359, from which time it may be supposed that the author, if contemporary, began to be more immediately conversant with the events he narrates. Hall conjectures that this work is by a contemporary; and assuredly, as the Chronicle advances, the internal evidence (for there is no other) is in favour of this supposition, and becomes more apparent from the year 1367 to its completion. In this conjecture we acquiesce, but with some qualification. Hall's edition continues without a break at the year of the accession of Richard II. A.D.

¹ As this MS. is one of great beauty and careful execution, and must have been written subsequently to the year 1380, though apparently not long after that period, it seems likely to have been a copy of a preceding original, which would, in this supposition, necessarily have been the work of a contemporary historian.

1377,¹ leading the reader to infer, that, down to the period when it terminates abruptly in 1380, this is the work of one Chronicler. This latter portion, from the accession of Richard II., has been adopted verbatim in the Chronicle by an anonymous Monk of Evesham, which Hearne has published under the title 'De Vita et Gestis Ricardi Secundi, a quodam Monacho Evesham.' It is true that this latter author has considerably amplified the text here given, as will be perceived by comparing the two together, and in no instance has he suppressed any part of the narrative. For the sake of marking this distinction, we have made a break at the commencement of the reign of Richard II.; but it is still uncertain whether this be the correct division, if there be two authors, or whether the whole of the narrative may not be due, as Hall has arranged it, to one pen; and that we ought not rather to consider it as a contemporary and continuous Chronicle from 1359² to 1380. The style of the two portions is very similar, and if the masterly character of Edward III.³ has been adopted, with some trifling additions, by Walsingham as his own; in like manner the Monk of Evesham may have been as unscrupulous, and borrowed, like the other, without acknowledgment the labour of a preceding author. Though we cannot determine this point, yet judging from the marked change in the style in the latter portion of this Chronicle, and from the internal evidence, we are inclined to conjecture that the authorship of the close of

² Perhaps 1367 is the more likely year; see infra, p. 203: for though the internal evidence is nearly sufficient to adjudge the whole of the latter part of the reign of Edward III. and the beginning of that of Richard II. to a contemporary, yet it is impossible to assign the precise point where this may be regarded as such.

³ Infra, pp. 225—227.

the reign of Edward III. and the commencement of that of Richard II. is due to an intermediate and therefore contemporary author.¹

The value of the Continuation.

§ 10. If this conjecture be received, the value of the concluding portion from 1359, or, at least, from 1367, (p. 203,) will necessarily be greatly enhanced. From p. 211 to the conclusion of the work, this author has been appropriated by Walsingham; and the fragment relating to Richard, as we have seen, by the anonymous Monk of Evesham. This Chronicle then is a guarantee that so far these historians are correct in their narrative. Unfortunately the Queen's College MS. is the only one which gives these annals, which seem to have been written certainly prior to the time of Walsingham's laborious work. What intervenes between 1337 and the latter portion of this work, is very brief and not of much value. Nor is brevity its only fault: it is frequently careless in recording facts, more than one instance of which has been marked in the notes to that portion of this edition.

The conclu-

§ 11. In conclusion the Editor has only to borrow the sentiments expressed in his edition of Nicholas Trivet, and to repeat his acknowledgment of the advantages this edition has received in passing through the press of Messrs. Bentley and Co. He has also in a particular manner to express his obligation to the gentleman who so ably superintends the reading department, for his valuable assistance and suggestions, especially respecting those passages which, from the state of the MSS., were occasionally faulty, and often obscure.

⁵ Our MS. Cott. Cl. E. viii. here inserts four obscure verses. Without pretending to understand them, we may premise that Hearne gives the following prophecy of Merlin, 'Mortuo Leone Justitiæ, surget Albus Rex.' (Vitæ Ed. II. App. 278.) The lines as they occur in the MS. are as follow:

'Mens, cor, cur cupiant? lex Christi vera jocunda,

Anglorum nomen tollet, Bruti renovabit.'

Angliæ Isabella transiit mare, pro pace facienda inter fratrem suum regem Franciæ et maritum suum regem Angliæ, quæ in Francia postea morabatur per totam Quadragesimam et ætatem, et rex Angliæ, vir suus, in Cantia ita, ¹quod cursus haberi posset facilius nunciorum; unde finaliter extitit concordatum, quod rex Angliæ daret Edwardo filio suo primogenito ducatum Aquitaniæ et comitatum Pontinii, et rex Franciæ reciperet homagium ipsius filii, et redderet sibi statim comitatum Pontinii, et terras in Aquitania de quibus fuit ²privatus; et de aliis equitatis per avunculum suum Carolum faceret sibi justitiæ complementum; super quibus omnibus misit rex Franciæ ³litteras suas patentes in Angliam, et alias litteras de conductu salvo, tam pro filio quam pro rege Angliæ, si ipse mallet in propria persona venire. Super qua optione multi magni tractatus fuerunt apud ⁴Langedone, et apud Doveriam, multis consulentibus quod rex in propria persona transiret; sed pater et filius Dispenser, qui nec audebant mare transire, nec rege transeunte in Anglia remanere, propter odium ⁵comitum et nobilium qui perfecto odio oderant illos, dederunt consilium ⁶et prævaluerunt, ut filius regis transiret; cujus transitus in caput ipsorum, sicut patet ex sequentibus, redundavit. Unde dominus rex Angliæ fecit chartam filio suo prædicto, de dictis ducatu et comitatu habendis et tenendis sibi et heredibus suis ⁷[regibus] Angliæ; et si

Warwick, et Arundel, et multos alios nobiles.
Et ipse tenuit Pentecosten apud Wodestock, which we continue to follow, continues the narrative to the year 1347, annexing several letters and documents connected with Edward up to that period. Hearne, in the anonymous Chronicle he has published as a Continuation of Hemingford, begins, as we have already noticed, at the words 'Item, dos assignata,' in 1326; and after the first sentence continues nearly word for word with Cott. Cl. E., with a few exceptions, such as the preface he gives to the year 1337, to the year 1339; when his MS., either being imperfect or through design, proceeds to the year 1353, and continues to the year 1377. But none of the latter part is like that of Hall's Continuator, which will be given in a subsequent part of this volume.

Et cum illis lanis, quæ ad numerum triginta millium saccorum se extendebant, misit in Brabantiam episcopum Lincolnæ, comitem Northamptoniæ, et multos armatos et architenentes et Wallenses, cum navium magna classe: quæ naves fuerunt per totam æstatem præcedentem, et ¹ [per] autumnum, in Tamysia et aliis portibus detentæ, ad magnum damnum totius regni; quia tota utilitas mercatorum, et nautarum, et omnium mercimoniorum, vehendorum et reportandorum per mare, [fuit] illo anno nequiter impedita. Et dominus Walterus de Manny juxta Flandriam exercuit magnam sævitiam, et interfecit omnes quos invenit in quadam insula, quæ vocatur Cagent, et cepit fratrem naturalem comitis Flandriæ: et hoc fecit, quia interfecerunt duos Anglicos, qui applicuerunt ad terram illius insulæ pro aqua dulci quærenda. Sed dominus rex fratrem dicti comitis cito remisit, pulchris muneribus, equis, et jocalibus honoratum.

Item, hoc anno ante Pentecosten venerunt piratæ regis Franciæ in galeis et spinaciis prope Hamptonam, et quia patriam ibi bene paratam ad resistendum eisdem viderunt, se protinus retraxerunt; et quia ibi non audebant applicare, nec in Insula Vecta, quæ fuit bene munita, se transtulerunt ad alia loca, quasi campestria, et multa mala quasi latrunculi commiserunt; et postea in festo Corporis Christi, apud Hastynges, quædam tuguria piscatorum combusserunt, et aliquos homines occiderunt. Item, contra insulam Taneti se multotiens ostenderunt, et contra Dovoriam, et etiam contra Folkstonam; sed ibidem multa mala non fecerunt, nisi contra pauperes piscatores, quia patria semper parata fuit contra eos. parvas et magnas; et die Jovis ante festum Nativitatis Johannis Baptistæ habuit ventum bonum, et incepit feliciter navigare. Et in die Veneris sequenti, scilicet in vigilia sancti Johannis, vidit classem navium Franciæ in portu de la Swyne paratam, et quasi castrorum acies ordinatam; et per totam diem deliberavit, quid esset consultius faciendum. Et in festo sancti Johannis, mane, classis Franciæ se dividens in tres turmas, movit se per spatium unius milliarii versus classem regis Angliæ; quod percipiens rex Angliæ, dixit non esse ulterius expectandum, sed se et suos ad arma paravit: ita quod cito post horam nonam, quum habuit ventum et solem ad tergum, et vim fluminis secum, divisit navigium suum similiter in tres turmas, et Francis dedit insultum; ubi fuit magnum prælium navale commissum, propter fortitudinem et magnitudinem navium Hispaniæ et Franciæ ad prælium paratarum. ¹[Finaliter] tamen Anglici Gallicos devicerunt, et naves primæ cohortis intraverunt, videlicet unam magnam navem vocatam 'Sanctus Dionysius,' et aliam vocatam 'Sanctus Georgius,' et alias naves, videlicet 'Christoferus,' et 'Blake Cog,' quas Gallici prinitus, ut supra scriptum est, in portu de Swyne dolose ceperunt. Et in isto primo conflictu fuerunt comites Gloucestriæ, Northamptoniæ, et Huntyndoniæ, qui fuit dux et ²admirallus navium de Quinque Portubus, et dominus Robertus de Morle, qui fuit admirallus et dux navium borealium, scilicet de Jarnemuthe, ³Lynne, et cæterarum navium borealium, et multi alii nobiles.

triginta naves. Sed una magna navis ² illorum
quæ vocabatur 'James de Depe,' voluit fugiendo cepisse quandam navem de Sandwyco, quæ fuit prioris ecclesiæ Christi, sed ipsi se defenderunt cum adjutorio comitis ³ Huntindoniæ; et duravit conflictus usque mane, scilicet in crastino sancti Johannis Baptistæ, sed finaliter Anglici vicerunt Normannos, et navem illorum ceperunt, in qua quadringentos homines et ultra interfectos et mortuos invenerunt.

In crastino autem dicti festi sancti Johannis, intellecto ⁴ quia dictæ triginta naves in nocte taliter recesserunt, misit dominus rex quadrapeace.

Amandi per quindecim milliaria ¹invasit, ubi quinquaginta milites, et alios quamplurimos, ceperunt et occiderunt, et quasi infinitas divitias invenerunt, et villam destruxerunt, et ita fecerunt toti patriæ circumquaque, et exercitui de victualibus abundantissime providerunt. Et duravit obsidio civitatis Tornacensis usque ad festum sanctorum Cosmæ et Damianæ; quo die post multos tractatus super treuga ineunda per Gallicos procurata, consensum fuit in treugam, quæ capta fuit ad petitionem Gallicorum usque ad festum sancti Johannis Baptistæ proximo tunc futurum, ut possit interim de pace tractari. Et redditi fuerunt captivi hinc et inde, sub conventionione ²jurata redeundi ad dictum festum sancti Johannis, in casu in quo non fieret pax finalis. Sed sic soluta fuit obsidio supradicta, et nobiles de Anglia, aliqui redierunt in Angliam. Fuerunt enim multi tractatus habiti super treuga prædicta, quia cum dictus dominus rex Angliæ remaneret apud Torniacensem in obsidione prædicta, et Philippus de Valoys, cum toto exercitu suo, ad quatuor leucas, juxta eum, existeret, sed ad removendum obsidionem accedere non auderet, sed per regem Boemiæ, qui fuit secum, super treuga ineunda, et oblata, fierent multi tractatus. Finaliter, dux Brabantiae, comes Hanoniæ, marchio de Julers, et comes de Gelre, et alii confœderati regis Angliæ, consenserunt quod treuga honesta, licet inutilis, caperetur; inutilis, dico, regi Angliæ et suis, non dictis comitibus, quibus villæ et castra ³restituta fuerunt, quas et quæ rex Franciæ antea diutius occupavit.⁴ Cui vacaretis animo ad bonam concordiam reformatum.

‘Et quod amicitia, inter vos et præfatum Philippum inita, minime nos moveret; nam ex quo, sine scitu et assensu vestro, treugas ac terminos ad tractandum de pace inter nos et dictum Philippum accepimus, dictam amicitiam cum eo de consilio principum vestrorum, quibus visum fuerit quod hoc, salvo honore vestro, possetis facere, contraxistis:

‘Vicariatum nobis per vos concessum propter hoc revocantes. Et quidem zelum hunc [quem] habetis ad faciendum dictam concordiam, plurimum commendamus; volentes vestræ patere notitiæ quod nos pacem rationabilem habere cum dicto Philippo semper optavimus et optamus; quam, ¹[in quantum] decuit, sumus cum instantia prosecuti.

‘Et re vera votivum nobis foret admodum et acceptum, si posset fieri per tanti mediatoris instantiam pax optata; sed quia scimus jus nostrum in regno Franciæ satis clarum, illud, arbitrio dubio, non proponimus ducere alicui per literas nostras committendum.

‘Verum dum attenta meditatione pensamus qualiter vestra consideratio circumspecta, videns patentem nostram justitiam, et dicti Philippi duritiam obstinatam et injuriam, nobiscum contra dictum Philippum vestri gratia ligam fecit velut in specialem adoptionis filium, de dilectionis exuberantia nos admittens, ut cum pace vestra loquamur, mirari non sufficimus quod præpotens vestra sublimitas, quæ ad laudem bonorum, et vindictam malorum, est divinitus instituta, contra nos Philippo injuriatori nostro notorio se ligavit.

³Anno DOMINI millesimo trecentesimo quadragesimo primo, Benedicti papæ duodecimi anno septimo, regni vero regis Edwardi tertii a conquestu quintodecimo, [ætatis scribentis sexagesimo octavo, in festo sancti Michaelis fuit dominus rex Angliæ Londoniis.]⁴ Et cito postea, in crastino sancti Lucæ evangelistæ, habuit archiepiscopus Cantuariæ provinciale concilium in ecclesia sancti Pauli Londoniis, cum suffraganeis suis, videlicet, Londoniensi, Cicestrensi, Sarisburiensi, Elyensi, Bathoniensi, Coventrensi, Mene-

² Robert of Avesbury, p. 76, adds to the above, 'par le vostre capeleyn lerschevesqe de Cauntirbirs.' How enraged the king was on the receipt of this spirited letter of John de Stratford, the archbishop, may be perceived from the king's reply, addressed for publication to the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, London, dated at Westminster the 10th (in Walsingham the 12th) day of February, in the fifteenth year of his reign in England, and second in France; which is given in Avesbury, pp. 77—89, and Wals. 176. The archbishop's letter is given by the former, but not by the latter historian.

At this place, properly speaking, Cod. Cl. E. VIII. terminates with a list of names without title, and apparently without an object; at the end of which the following sentence occurs: 'Anno DOMINI 1249. Rex consumpsit in Vasconiam vicesies et septies cent. m^l. lib. in fratribus suis.'

The rest of the MS., though seemingly in the same hand, has more of the character of a commonplace book than a history, as no order or succession of dates is given. Among other documents connected with the reign of Edward III., there are to be there found the letter of pope Benedict to the king, and Edward's reply, both preserved in Rymer and Walsingham, — a letter of the council of Genoa to Edward III., — Edward's defiance of Philip on the field of Tournay, A. D. 1340, — and the French king's reply, which immediately follow the list of names, &c. mentioned above.

³ From this place, continuing from p. 126, we go on with the additional narrative as it occurs in Cod. Reg. No. 13. A. XVIII. 4. and Cott. Nero, D. x.

In quo concilio multa tractata fuerunt pro libertatis ecclesiasticæ observatione, et morum reformatione, quæ tunc non poterant terminari; sed usque ad aliud concilium, similiter convocandum, fuerant omnia prorogata. [Quo concilio pendente, ad procurationem prælatorum et quorundam comitum, fuit quædam pax inter regem et archiepiscopum reformata, utinam ad honorem ecclesiæ Anglicanæ.]²

Hoc anno circa Adventum DOMINI, audito rumore quod David le Bruys, qui diutinam moram traxit in Franciæ partibus, consensu Philippi de Valoys rediret in Scotiam cum multitudo armatorum, et teneret ibi Natale prope marchiam Angliæ, rex Angliæ cum comite Derbyæ, et aliis armatis paucis, se transtulit versus Scotiam, et audito quod David le Bruys voluit tenere Natale apud ³Menros, rex præveniens tenuit suum Natale ibidem, et per nuncios obtulit se paratum pugnare cum Scotis; sed ipsi noluerunt pugnam aliquam expectare, sed ultra mare Scotiæ latitarunt. Rex tamen et sui quæsiverunt habere facere cum eisdem, et, quærendo, magnas hyemales angustias tolerarunt; multasque prædas ceperunt, et patriam vastarunt ubique. Sed quidam a suis et nostris, pauci a casu fortuito ceciderunt. Et finaliter fuit inita una treuga usque ad festum Pentecostes.

Sed barones, tam de borea quam aliis partibus regni, interfuerunt; ita quod summa militum galeatorum ad ducentos quinquaginta milites et amplius ascendebat. Sed ita tarde exiverunt in campum, quod nox obscura superveniens quasi totum negotium impedivit; ita quod vix decem equi fuerunt perdit, vel lucrati. comitem Devoniae, et baronem de Stafford, et dominum Willelmum de Kellesby, cum quingentis armatis et mille sagittariis, in Britanniam, in adiutorium comitissae praedictae; qui fuerunt parati apud Portesmouth cum classe boreali et australi in vigilia sancti Laurentii, ventum prosperum expectantes, et in vigilia Assumptionis sequentis navigare coeperunt. Quo die Assumptionis rex Angliae in turri Londoniarum fecit nuptias celebrari inter Lionellum, filium ¹tertium, et Isabel-lam, filiam et haeredem comitis Ultoniae de Hibernia, decimum aetatis suae annum agentem: ad quas nuptias venerunt tres fratres praedicatores, missi per duos cardinales, scilicet per Petrum episcopum Penestrinum, et Ambaldum, prope marchiam Flandriae commorantes, ad habendas literas regias pro se et ducentis equitaturis, ad transeundum mare, et Angliae regnum intrare, et ad tractandum cum rege de pace vel treuga. Et statim rex misit pro archiepiscopo, ad deliberandum cum eo de diversis, et utrum essent huiusmodi literae concedendae. Et habita deliberatione duorum dierum, respondit, quod ipse rex voluit parcere ipsorum laboribus et expensis, ac infra paucos dies in regno Franciae habere colloquium cum eisdem; praesertim cum diu ante adventum dictorum fratrum ad transeundum in Franciam se parasset, quem transitum non potuit praedictorum cardinalium expectatione differre.

Post praemissa, circa octavas Assumptionis, venerunt nautae et literae, missae domino regi per comitem Northamptoniae et collegas ipsius, in quibus continebatur, quod tota classis eorum, quae continebat ducentas sexaginta naves pra-

Sed visa classe navium praedictarum, et se undique involutos, tres galeae, antequam naves possent terram capere, fugae praesidium petierunt. Et undecim galeae, quarum tres fuerunt permaximae, quoddam flumen aquae recentis illius portus strictum et arctum intraverunt, sed et galeis dimissis, ad terram fugerunt; et tam ipsi, quam obsidentes castrum et villam per terram, relictam obsidione, et quodam castro vocato Goule-Forest, una cum victualibus, dimisso vacuo, recesserunt. Nautae vero Anglici insequentes, dictas undecim galeas, cum parvis naviculis et bargiis, combusserunt: sicque omnes Anglici ad terram applicuerunt, fueruntque cum gaudio et honore suscepti; ac discurrentes per patriam, indiscrete, neminem qui resisteret, invenerunt. Postea vero, recolligentes se, ordinauerunt simul et discretius equitare per patriam; ac dominum de Say custodiam dicti castri de Goule-Forest deputaverunt, et majorem partem navium in Angliam pro regis transitu remiserunt: ¹[quorum nautae praemissi omnia per ordinem retulerunt.]

Et post recessum dicti comitis et exercitus sui versus Britanniam, rex Angliæ, cum magno exercitu armatorum et peditum, se traxit versus Sandwich, expectans reversionem navium, tam ibi, quam apud Winchelsea; quod percipiens rex Franciæ, misit potentiam suam per partes de Caley, et omnium portuum usque ad marchiam Britannæ Minoris. ³ Ad quas quidem literas, domino papæ deferendas, fuit destinatus dominus Johannes de Shordych, miles sapiens et juris professor, qui, eodem die quo venit Avenionem, post prandium intravit in cameram domini papæ, et prædictas literas eidem præsentavit ex parte domini regis et magnatum regni Angliæ; et dominus papa, præsciens causam adventus sui ad curiam, vocavit omnes cardinales, et includebat eos in cameram suam privatam, ipso existente ⁴[in] camera majori. Deinde facta reverentia, ipse solus introductus fuerat in cameram privatam, ubi papa

² Here Cod. Reg. 13 A. xviii. 4, ends. The rest which follows is from Cod. Cott. Nero D. x. fol. 131 et seq. Where also occurs an extension of the above document in Latin, which may be found in Rymer, v. 385, dated Dec. 10, 1343. This version it is unnecessary to repeat here; but merely to direct attention to it as an illustration or exaggeration of the remonstrance made by the lords and commons in the previous month of May.

of Adam of Murimuth, it is impossible to determine. It is probable, however; as the sole MS., Nero D. x., from which it is taken, is ancient, and appears to have been the production of one hand. This appears the more likely from the tone of the subsequent narrative, such as the details of John of Shoreditch’s interview with the pope; his distinctly marking that he was ‘juris professor,’—and his suspicion of the pope as being ‘præsciens causam adventus;’ for throughout Murimuth’s chronicle his bias against the court of Rome at that time is very apparent.

posuit se in cathedra, assistantibus omnibus cardinalibus; in quorum præsentia dominus Johannes literas suas præsenteravit. Et, eo remoto de privata camera, papa fecit legi dictas literas; et, eis visis et lectis, iterum fuit introductus in cameram. Tunc audivit multa aspera et dura verba, et inter cætera papa dixit; quod ipse non providebat extraneis personis de aliquibus beneficiis vacantibus, nisi de duobus. Et dictus dominus Johannes in præsentia omnium cardinalium respondit, 'Pater sancte, providistis de decanatu Eboracensi domino ¹Petra[goricensi], quem rex et omnes proceres regni Angliæ reputant capitalem inimicum regis et regni.' Finaliter dominus papa dixit, 'Bene scimus quis fecit et dictavit istas literas, et scimus quod tu non fecisti eas; et est unus qui pungit nos, et nos puniemus eum; scimus ²omnia!' Adjecit quod unus miles dicebat verba famosa de persona sua et Romana ecclesia, de quo papa monstravit se nimis offensum; et dixit quod scriberet regi et communitati responsum super contentis in literis antedictis. Cardinales vero his auditis de palatio recesserunt, quasi commoti et desolati: ac idem dominus Johannes, capta domini papæ licentia, exivit similiter a camera, et absque mora aliqua festinavit se ab Avinione, ne forte invite sustineret impedimentum; et sic se diver-

⁴ This letter does not occur in Rymer. One to the like purport, addressed to the sheriff of Kent, and dated July 23, 1343, is given in his Collections, v. 377.

In our MS. similar letters are given, addressed severally to his son prince Edward, as prince of Wales and duke of Cornwall, to the sheriffs of B——, of Somerset, and of —— (illegible), which it is unnecessary to insert here, as they are nearly in the same words.

ragesimo quarto, pontificatus vero domini papæ Clementis sexti anno tertio, et Edwardi regis Angliæ tertii a conquestu decimo octavo, post festum Trinitatis, rex habuit parliamentum suum Londoniis, in quo petiit a clero decimam, et decimam-quintam a populo, super quo non fuit minima altercatio; tandem, tamen, rex obtinuit per unum annum.

Circa festum Assumptionis beatæ Mariæ, dominus rex ad utilitatem regni sui prohibuit antiquam monetam florenorum, et ordinavit novam: scilicet majorem florenum de dimidia marca; minorem de tribus solidis, quatuor denariis; et minimam de viginti denariis; et vocantur nobiles, et digne, quia nobiles sunt pulchri et puri.

ANNO DOMINI millesimo trecentesimo quadragesimo quinto, pontificatus vero domini papæ Clementis sexti anno quarto, et regni regis Edwardi tertii a conquestu decimo-nono, dux Britanniae, qui fraudulenter per Philippum de Valoys fuit detentus incarceratus, evasit de Francia, et venit in Angliam statim post Pascha. Et circa idem tempus ordinavit rex escambium monetæ apud Londonias, apud Cantuariam, et apud Eboracum, ad utilitatem regni sui permaximam.

Quibus in eisdem partibus non moram, sed laborem, trahentibus per unum annum et amplius, talem DEUS contulit expeditionem, ut contra inimicos suos Francigenas semper prævaluerunt in conflictu, multos occidendo, quamplures in captivitatem incarce-

ANNO DOMINI millesimo trecentesimo quadragésimo sexto, pontificatus vero papæ Clementis sexti anno quinto, et regni regis Edwardi tertii a conquestu vicesimo, post festum Natalis DOMINI, rex a populo suo communi, cum auditis clamoribus et querelis, eo quod provisores victualium pro hospitio suo se male habuerunt inter populum, bona sua, scilicet blada, fœnum, literam, oves, boves, aucas, et gallinas, carnes et pisces, et quicquid mandi potuit, capientes, imo potius rapientes, nihilque solventes, præcepit ut justitia fieret juxta transgressorum demerita; super quibus, inquisitione capta, plures comperti fuerunt culpabiles in hac parte, unde quidam ex prædictis subierunt suspendium, quidam vero redemptionem fecerunt, ita quod in posterum didicerunt cautius negotiari.

Eodem anno circa Quadragesimam, rex percepit in manu sua omnes proventus et emolumenta quæ cardinales habuerunt in Anglia, nolens eos tanto gaudere beneficio, eo quod majori parte foveant papæ, et Philippo de Valoys qui se dicit regem Franciæ.

Multi quidem Anglici insequabantur Gallicos fugientes, sed dies non permisit: obscuritas etenim noctis supervenientis obumbrabat, quod viis omnibus oportuit tam dominum regem quam cæteros in loco eodem pernoctare; et sic se quieti dederunt tali, quali DOMINUS illis destinavit pro tempore, nec est multum credibile ut sopor nimius illos occuparet, quos eminens periculum cum penuria alimentorum maxime fatigaret. Gallicorum. Quam quidem obsidionem, domino Waltero Manny existente duce provido, comes Derbiæ cum exercitu suo viriliter assiluit more belli; qui breviter obtenta victoria, et obsidione fracta, hostibus etiam propulsis in fugam, multos prostravit in ore gladii; comites vero del Isle et Valentyne, cum multis aliis, secum deduxit captivos.

Post hoc vero, in redeundo, conquestæ sunt villæ de Peragor, Lisle, et Mountgret, Pictavia, et aliæ. Deinde quidem, habito tempore optato, procedebat exercitus versus villam Aguilon, ad conquerendum; quam cum expugnasset, non ultro aut lente se reddidit, sed maxima vi cogente conquesta fuit. In ea siquidem, sicut in aliis locis et oppidis, villis et villulis, prius captis et lucrat, copia rerum victualium abundabat satis affluenter, ita ut tam ex his, quam ex redemptionibus captivorum, et lucris ab hostibus multipliciter provenientibus, totus exercitus prosperabatur in divitiis. Super quo Philippus rex Franciæ maxime contristatus, et quasi in furorem agitatus, misit dominum Johannem de Francia, filium suum, et alios magnates quamplures validos et nominatissimos, cum numerosa multitudo, tam armatorum quam pedestrium, quorum summa se extendit ad centum millia hominum et amplius, pro obsidione ponenda circa villam Aguilon, cujus custodia baroni de Stafford committebatur. Et interim, obsidione quidem imposita, ut prædicitur, dominus Johannes de Francia sacramentaliter juravit se inde nullatenus fore recessurum priusquam villam conquestasset, et malam mortem ingessisset inclusis. Appropinquante autem festo sancti Michaelis, cum dicta obsidio ibi consedisset pro tempore non modico, multum expendeus, parum proficiens, Explicit opus Adæ Murymouth, canonici Londoniensis, et incipit Continuatio aliqualis temporum subsequentium, incipiendo tamen annum secundum computationem Ecclesiæ Romanæ, viz. a Nativitate Dominica, et continuando usque ad idem festum anno revoluto.

ANNO DOMINI M.CCC.XXXVII., et regis Anglorum Edwardi tertii anno XI., orta est grandis discordia inter reges Franciæ et Angliæ, ex eo, quod rex Franciæ multas terras et oppida in Vasconia improbe usurpaverat; qua de causa rex Angliæ plures oblationes humiles regi Franciæ fecerat, si saltem sic terras suas recuperare posset: sed cum nil proficeret, collectis undique pecuniis, mare transire disposuit. Circa festum Margaretæ rex Edwardus transiit in Flandriam; inde Coloniam adiit, ubi imperatorem Bavarrum sibi conciliavit, ¹ Brabantos et Flandrenses sibi fœderavit; de quorum consilio arma Franciæ suis immiscuit armis, boreales partes Franciæ usque ad Tornacum incendit et vastavit.

ANNO DOMINI M.CCC.XL. et regis Anglorum Edwardi tertii anno XIV., idem rex Edwardus, in vigilia sancti Joannis Baptistæ, cum ducentis navibus mare ingressus est versus Flandriam; sed juxta maritima Flandriæ classem Francorum copiosam et instructam obviam habuit. Qua de causa per totum diem illum cum suis deliberans, in crastino superveniente in ejus auxilium valente milite Roberto de Morleia cum boreali classe Angliæ, commissum est navale bellum fortissimum, quale circa oras Angliæ nusquam est visum; ubi, Deo favente, Franci et Normanni, acriter sagittati per Anglos, sunt devicti; partim cæsi, partim ²gratis submersi, partim capti, navibusque eorum, exceptis paucis quæ aufugerant, totaliter occupatis.

ANNO DOMINI M.CCC.XLI., et regis Anglorum Edwardi tertii anno xv., idem rex Edwardus cum navigio suo adiit Britanniam Minorem; ubi, per cibos et potus inconvenientes, plures de suis amisit. Missi sunt tamen ad eum duo cardinales, qui, ex parte papæ, treugas triennales inter reges indixerunt; sub quo spatio de jure, quod rex Angliæ vendicavit in regnum Franciæ, ad plenum posset discuti. Et hoc anno, nonas Junii, natus est regi Edwardo Edmundus apud Langeleye, ex Philippa regina. Quo anno rex Edwardus transfretavit in Britanniam, recepto prius homagio de domino Joanne de Monte-forti, qui fuit verus heres ducatus Minoris Britanniae; ubi rex Edwardus plures villas, munitiones, et castra sibi rebellantia fortiter conquistavit. Post hæc villam de Vanes est aggressus, et illam obsedit: et quamvis Philippus de Valoys, rex Francorum, sibi cum glomerata multitudine occurrisset, captisque inter ipsos treugis, remansit nihilominus villa de Vanes prædicta regi Angliæ subjecta.¹

ANNO DOMINI M.CCC.L., et regis Anglorum Edwardi tertii anno XXIV., factum est bellum navale inter Anglicos et Hispanos, in mari juxta Wynchelsey, in festo Decollationis sancti Joannis Baptistæ, in quo acriter fuit pugnatum, nam ab illo vix aliquis evasit illæsus. Demum cessit victoria Anglicis, Deo duce, captis XXIV. navibus eorundem. In quo conflictu dicti Hispani, viri strenui et robustissimi, quia se reddere noluerant, jussu regis Edwardi, omnes miserabiliter perierunt.

¹ Thomas de Bradwardine was born at Hatfield in Suffolk, according to Godwin; or at Hartefield in the diocese of Chichester, according to the looser biography of Bale; and was educated at Merton College, Oxford. His talents attracted the attention of John Stratford, archbishop of Canterbury, who took him into his service, and subsequently introduced him to his sovereign. Edward was so pleased with his simple piety that he selected him as his confessor, and appointed him to a canonry in Lincoln, and the chancellorship of St. Paul's, London. His deep research and learning obtained for him the title of 'Doctor profundus,' which was nevertheless united to so pious a life, and so simple a faith, that some have even ascribed to the virtue of his prayers the victories which his royal master achieved in France. He was elected archbishop of Canterbury on the death of his first patron; but his installation was postponed for a short time, on account of the king having nominated John de Ufford (mentioned in the text) to this see. On his demise the previous election was confirmed. He did not, however, long enjoy that dignity, for he died before he was consecrated. His principal published works are,—one in three books against the Pelagians; one on Speculative Geometry, and a treatise on Proportion. Bale and Altamura have ascribed to him several other works, yet unedited; but these must be received with caution. M. de Fresnoy calls him a Cordelier, but Quetif and Echard show that he was a Dominican. He fell a victim to the plague in the subsequent year.

Item, hoc anno obiit Simon de Byrchestone, abbas Westmonasterii; cui canonice per electionem successit frater Simon de Langham. Hic Simon de Langham flourishes. tantæ industriæ et circumspectionis fuit, et tantæ facundiæ micuit, quod rex Edwardus fecit eum Thesaurarium Angliæ, et non cancellarium. Post promotus est ad episcopatum Eliensem, et tunc factus cancellarius Angliæ; deinde, vacante sede Cantuariensi, ad illam est ¹translatus; demum, crescente ejus fama, Urbanus papa quintus assumpsit eum in presbyterum cardinalem tituli sancti Sixti. Postremo vero factus episcopus Prænestinus per dominum papam Gregorium XI., obiitque Avinionæ [die xxii.] mensis Julii anno DOMINI ²M.CCC.LXXV.

Obiit etiam hoc anno Michael, abbas sancti Albani; cui successit frater Thomas de la ³More, prior de ⁴Tyneme, vir bonæ conversationis et sanctæ vitæ: quidam tamen affirmant, quod isti duo abbates obierunt anno præcedenti.  Edward by the French.

'O rex Anglorum, destructor pacificorum, Credis Francorum regnum superare decorum.'²

Quibus versibus quidam Anglicus, videlicet magister Robertus de Avesbury,³ curiæ Cantuariæ registri custos, respondit in hunc modum :

The reply by Robert of Avesbury.

'Francia regnorum fortissima flos aliorum, Dudum sublimis, quasi parvula nunc stat in imis.
 Hoc quia peccavit ; Phelp et Jon quando creavit, Injustos reges, ostendendo male leges,
 Edward per legem sibi sumpsisse bene regem
 Sic quia ⁴nolebat merito flens Francia flebat.
 Rex Carolus rectus Francorum sistit erectus,
 Qui moritur, nato nullo de se generato.
 Tunc lex ad florem sibi junxit proximiozem.
 Edward Anglorum regem, de germine florum,
 Lex agnatorum zelum confundit eorum,
 Qui spernunt natum de germana generatum.

³ 'Anebury,' text. See Hearne's preface to his edition of Robert of Avesbury's Hist. Ed. III. p. 2. It is singular that this author should not be mentioned by Leland nor Bale, (which latter Hearne is not surprised at,) Wood, John Joscelyn, (Catalogus Historiarum,) Boston, (Speculum Coenobitarum,) nor latterly by Tanner. Hearne conjectures that he died about the year 1357.

⁴ Or 'volebat,' says Hall, who remarks, that writers of such verses paid little attention to quantity.

Dantes pro rege genitum patrui, sine lege, Ille vocabatur Phelp, de quo Jon generatur.
 Regnum Francorum tenuit bene neuter eorum.
 Bellicus eventus probat hoc, testis violentus
 Nullus miretur, si Francia mole gravetur, Dum sequitur pura negat Edwardo sua jura.
 Quod petit ¹ huic detur, tunc Francia pacificetur.
 Jon velut intrusus est floribus ipse reclusus.
 Et sinat Edwardo cum flore frui leopardo, Sic vero pacifica stet Francia, nunc inimica.
 Hæc quæ scripta legis, tollunt discrimina regis,
 Quod non pacificos hic distruxit, sed iniquos.²

² Richard Fitz-Ralph was, according to some, a native of Ireland; but it is more probable that he was of English extraction. He was educated at Oxford, where he distinguished himself as much for his learning as for his bold attacks against the abuses which began to prevail in the Mendicant orders. His work, entitled 'Defensorium Curatorum contra Mendicantes,' (subsequently printed at Paris in 1496, 8vo.) excited their resentment; and, after the king had raised him to the primatial see of Armagh, they accused him of heresy, and induced the pope to summon him to Avignon, where he died in 1360, before his suit was ended. See a catalogue of his works in Wharton ap. Cave, 40-41; and Leland de Script. Britt. p. 372, whose virulence against the Mendicants is there amusingly displayed.

Item, eodem anno primogenitus regis Edwardi tertii accepit principatum Aquitaniam, factis homagio et fidelitate suo patri pro eo; qui eodem anno, circa festum Purificationis beatæ Mariæ, cum uxore et toto suo retenemento in Vasconiam transfretavit.

ANNO DOMINI M.CCC.LXVIII., et regis Anglorum Edwardi tertii anno XLII., mense Martii, visa est stella comata, inter partes septentrionales et occidentales, suos radios versus Franciam porrigens. Mense Aprilis, Leonellus, filius regis Edwardi, dux Clarenciæ, cum electa multitudine nobilium Anglorum, transivit versus Mediolanum ad ducendum filiam ³ Calias in conjugem, cum qua medietatem domini Mediolani haberet. Celebrato inter eos cum maxima gloria matrimonio, ipse dux, circa festum Nativitatis beatæ Mariæ proxime sequens, diem clausit extremum.

Item hoc anno, mense Octobris, dominus Symon Langham, archiepiscopus Cantuariensis, creatus est in cardinalem; et sequenti anno, mense Aprilis, versus curiam cepit iter. Igitur dominus papa transtulit magistrum Willielmum Witleseye, episcopum Wigorniensem, ad ecclesiam Cantuariensem; et magistrum Linne, episcopum Cicestrensem ad ecclesiam Wygorniensem; ac magistrum Willielmum ² Reade ad ecclesiam Cicestrensem promovit.

ANNO DOMINI M.CCC.LXIX., et regis Anglorum Edwardi tertii XLIII., obiit Blanchia, ducissa Lancastriæ, filia domini Henrici nuper ducis Lancastriæ, et in ecclesia sancti Pauli honorifice sepelitur. Circa finem mensis rex Edwardus tenuit parliamentum suum apud Westmonasterium, in quo tractavit de rupto fœdere inter ipsum et regem Francorum.

ciam, rex Edwardus, sicut olim, totum regnum Franciæ vendicabat. Quare, circa festum Nativitatis beatæ Mariæ, misit Joannem ducem Lancastriæ, et comitem Herefordiæ, cum valida manu militum in Franciam, ut ibi strenue pro jure suo pugnarent. Sed ibi parum, vel nihil, profuerunt. Nam grandis exercitus Francorum super montem le ¹Chalkhull prope Calesiam, et exercitus Anglorum sub eodem monte, longo tempore jacuerunt. Quidam valentes de Anglicis decreverunt inire certamen cum Gallicis, sed prædicti domini hoc ratum noluerunt habere; dixerunt enim eos non habere sufficientes homines armorum ad congregiendum cum tanta multitudine pugnatorum. Comes vero de Warrewyk, audiens quod die statuto Franci vellent pugnare cum nostris illac existentibus, ipse et ceteri validi cum electa virorum fortium comitiva confestim pervenerunt ad mare, navibusque paratis versus Calesiam cœperunt prospere navigare : de quorum adventu exercitus Francorum ita extitit stupefactus, quod antequam terram attigerant, relictis victualibus suis cum tentoriis, latenter in fugam conversus est. Comes vero, ad terram applicans, cum suis Normanniam properavit. Insulam de Cawes ferro et igne vastavit, sed heu ! in redeundo versus Angliam apud Calesiam morbo pestilentiali arreptus, confestim fuit sublatus de medio, parem sibi in armorum strenuitate, et fidelitate regi et regno Angliæ, post eum superstitem minime dereliquit.

Clerus vero distulit eas concedere, usque post festum Paschæ, et tunc taliter fuerunt concessæ, sic quod in tribus annis forent certis terminis persolvendæ: consimiliter a laicis triennalis quintadecima fuit concessa.

Robertus vero Knolles cum suis in quoddam castrum in Britannia se recepit. Francigenæ vero in alios sic divisos, necdum in locis tutis constitutos, acriter irruerunt, omnesque pro majori parte aut occidunt, aut captivos secum adducunt; sicque propter eorum imprudentiam et dissensionem regno Angliæ tunc accidit maximum detrimentum. His eulogium.

Octavo die Julii, durante adhuc parlamento apud Westmonasterium, in palatio regis defunctus est princeps Walliæ, primogenitus regis Edwardi, videlicet in die Sanctæ Trinitatis. Quo die, ob reverentiam tanti festi, ubicunque foret in orbe, maximam solemnitatem quolibet anno consueverat celebrare. Cujus fortunam militiæ, tanquam alterius Hectoris, omnes gentes tam Christiani quam pagani, dum vixit sanus, plurimum formidabant:¹ corpus vero ejus in ecclesia Christi Cantuariensi honorifice sepelitur. Quo extincto, profecto extinctus est cum eo effectus parlamenti; nam illi de communitate, cum quibus ipse tenebat, non sunt talem exitum dicti parlamenti sortiti, qualem pro meliori habuisse sperabant.²

At this place the MS. from which Hall has taken his edition of the continuation of Murimuth continues down to 1380; but, perhaps more correctly speaking, our author, whoever he was, ends here. The Life of Richard II. by an anonymous Monk of Evesham, published by Hearne, contains almost always verbatim the whole of the text of the following fragment. Nevertheless we continue the narrative, for two reasons: 1st. because Hearne's Monk of Evesham may only have been a continuator of, or borrower from, the author who continued Murimuth; and, secondly, to prove more determinately against Leland, and his followers, Bale, &c., that Adam of Murimuth did not flourish to so late a period as these authorities have assigned to him. For further proof of which see the Preface to this edition. However, we may observe that the Chronicle of the Monk of Evesham, as published by Hearne, is considerably enlarged, though we shall only note a few of these passages.

In quo parlamento concessæ erant regi a clero duæ decimæ, simul in principio mensis Martii persolvendæ; et a laico populo duæ quintædecimæ, in festo Purificationis similiter solvendæ, ad regni defensionem et inimicorum expugnationem. ² Urban VI. was acknowledged as legitimate pontiff by the greater part of the Empire, by Bohemia, Hungary, and England ; which accounts for our author, if contemporary, thus early determining his opponent to be schismatical. Clement VII., who was elected on the 21st of September of the same year, was acknowledged by France, Spain, Scotland, Sicily, and Cyprus. This unhappy schism morally ended in the 41st session of the General Council of Constance, when Otho Colonna was elected pope, November 11, 1417, and took the title of Martin V. Nevertheless, opposition to its decrees was kept up by the refusal of Peter de Luna (calling himself Benedict XIII.) to submit to the sentence of deposition pronounced against him by that council. He continued obstinate till his death in 1424, when the anti-pope, Giles de Mugno (Clement VIII.) was elected in his stead, but made an end to the schism by resigning his pretended pontificate, July 26, 1429. During the continuance of this schism those countries which acknowledged each pope, were severally called 'his obedience.'
